colored brethren. TERRIBLE FIGHT WITH A SNAKE .-- One of the most desperate and thrilling adventures that was ever recorded took place last Sunday evening about four miles northwest of this city in which the terrible fangs of a diamond rattle snake were matched against the strong arms of a youthful boy. Munroe Keys. a browny, stout young lad of some fourteen years of age, accompanied by two sisters, by some years the seniors of Munroe, started from the house to the | ing well at present. spring, a short distance away, to get a pail of water. When near the foot of the slant to where the spring was, to their surprise the party discovered a huge rattlesnake which lay coiled a few paces in their lead. The appearance of the young people seemed to enrage the rattler to such an extent that it at once commenced slashing its tail and hissing with such furry that the noise could be heard for a considerable distance away. Not waiting to be further disturbed, the huge reptile made a dash at the crowd, springing far into the air and falling on the ground with a deep thud. The young boy remained very much composed and with the determination of a young warrior calmly took off his belt and attacked the snake in a fight to death. After a struggle for some time the snake made a final spring at its antagonist and its terrible fangs were clinched on either side in the muscular part of the boys' arm, just above the elbow. After the snake's hold had been broken it dropped from the bleeding wound to the ground and started to run, but still having the determination to kill his enemy, the boy seized it by the
